

SEASONS

Four seasonal haiku

may blossom like snow
has drifted improbably
over the hedgerows

a late summer rose
waits under a veil of frost for the sun's last kiss

poems like windfalls
decompose in sun and rain sweetening the earth

winter's bony hand
clings to the thawing river in desperation